The Commissioners.

The business pertaining to the appointment of the Utah commissioners having temporarily been completed by the conclusion of the work of the late election, the members have adjourned to meet at Washington on December 15th. Some of the gentlemen having already left the Territory for their homes, and the others purpose leaving immediately. Portions of the report of their work have been forwarded to the Capital and the balance having been agreed upon will be duly presented to the Secretary of the Interior, making in all a very voluminous document, and which will, doubtless, in time be made public. The task committed to these gentlemen was anything but pleasant and if it had been in less able hands might have created dire confusion in the Territory; as it is, with their ability, good judgment and cool bearing under and through all the complications, the first election has gone off pleasantly, and the large majority of the people are satisfied with their labors. They have, evidently, aimed to keep above party spirit and have apparently, endeavored to avoid party lines, outside of what were reached by their construction of the Edmunds law and the Hoar amendment. Exceptions have been taken to some of their rulings, by prominent men of both the local parties, but this was nothing more than was expected, by the members of the commission and the general public, though the majority of sore places have been shown by the Liberal party. The honored gentlemen will certainly have the good wishes of nearly the whole people of Utah during their vacation and when election time comes they will be pleased to see them back again, trusting to their continued fair dealing and justice in the delicate situation the people of Utah are placed in.

A MEDICINE of real merit, prescribed by many leading physicians, and universally recommended by those who have used it as a true tonic, is Brown's Iron Bitters.

Select Templars Uniform.

The Select Templars, of the Temple of Honor, have received their uniforms of their order, and they are indeed beautiful. The hats, military in shape, with blue and purple plumes fastened over the front and down the back of the hat. The shoulder belt and waist belt are made of purple velvet, with gold edge, and the cuffs of the coat are made of the same material. The swords are beautiful specimens, and bear all the insignias of the order, with the name of the owner on one side. The whole uniform is very attractive and very handsome. The Select Templars are to the Temple of Honor, what the Knights Templar are to Masonry.

On the 5th of December, the order will indulge in a grand anniversary celebration, and as the order is in a prosperous condition, both as to members and means, it promises to be a fine affair.

THE CONTEMPT CASE.

Annie Gallifant is Discharged from Custody.

The commitment of Annie Gallifant, on Friday, to the Penitentiary, for refusing to answer certain questions put to her by the grand jury, was a topic which brought about many animated discussions on Saturday. Of course, the festive reporter is excluded from the grand jury room, and he is unable to give anything concerning events in that secret chamber occupied by that body, save so far as he may get them by hearsay; but the interest manifested in the case induced an inquiry and the result is published as fairly and in as unprejudiced a manner as possible, letting the people draw their own conclusions. Annie Gallifant was subpoenaed before the grand jury in a case in which a charge of polygamy was under consideration. It is intimated that she was the wife of the individual against whom the charge was preferred. She admitted she was married, and also declared she had never been married but once. The definite character of the questions which she declined to answer, is unknown, but it is safe to say that they related directly to the charge of polygamy. To one question she answered that it was foolish, and she would not reply; to another she made an evasive response, and to some others she emphatically refused to make any reply whatever. Judge Sprague states that she was as cool and collected as any human being could be; and that instead of being confused, or dazed, she was as ready-witted a witness as one could ever see, and no member of the bar could be more ready or shrewd in answering such questions as she choose to respond to. She was notified she would be taken before the judge, and still coolly persisted in refusing to reply.

When arraigned before Judge Hunter, she was again asked if she would answer the questions, and she again stated that she would not. Judge Hunter then told her that the refusal was a matter of contempt, and "unless you answer, I shall be forced to commit you to the Penitentiary. After this admonition, do you still persist in refusing to answer?" The lady replied that she did. Judge Hunter then ordered that she be committed until she answered the questions. His honor was offered bail for her and was asked that she be allowed to consult an attorney, but he stated the sentence had been passed, and it would be enforced.

Judge Sprague states that she gave no reason for declining to answer some of the questions, and did not claim that she would criminate herself. She wore a cloak or shawl all the time, and if she were in the delicate condition intimated it was not apparent to either the jury or to Judge Hunter, and if they were acquainted with her condition the information had been obtained outside the court and the grand jury room.

On Saturday afternoon, after the grand jury had been dismissed, Judge Hunter ordered, Annie Gallifant released.

This is the statement that is made by a person present all the time.

The Draper Assault Case.

A couple of months ago a communication was published in this paper, written from Draper, in this county, charging Lewis Garff with brutally assaulting and beating one Mr. Andrews, both residents of that place. Garff was bound over, and on Saturday his case was brought before the grand jury. It is but just here to state that the charges against Garff, in the testimony of the witnesses called with the idea that they would make out a case against the jury decided to dismiss the case and that body refused to indict Mr. Garff. Garff is a highly respected citizen of Draper, and he and his friends were much grieved at the publication of the communication above referred, but decided rather than to get into a newspaper controversy, to await the action of the grand jury to vindicate him, which that body has done.

Fine Jewelry.

This is the season of the year when jewelers are plying their vocation with avidity, and among the busiest of this class of merchants in this business in Salt Lake City stands the firm of E. J. Swaner & Company. Their attractive store is always well filled with articles of jewelry made of gold and silver, many of them dotted with diamonds, pearls, rubies, garnets, etc., most bewitching to the eye; also watches, gold and silver cases, containing movements by the best American and foreign makers, to which can be added their large stock of silver ware, opera glasses, spectacles etc., not forgetting to mention the largest and most attractive variety of clocks in the town. But in preparation for the demand of the holidays the firm is daily adding to their stock by which it is kept replete with almost everything that can be called for, and to which more is continually being added. They also have the largest manufacturing establishment in the town.

Attempted Murder at Ogden.

Ogden City is acquiring an unfavorable reputation as the scene of homicides and general rascality, at a rate rather too rapid for the well-earned good reputation of the law-abiding and moral bulk of her population. On Friday night, one of the most unprovoked dastardly attempts at murder was made that we ever became aware of. The following are the particulars of the cowardly act as far as learned by our reporter:

It appears a number of friends of the late John Elvin, the Central Pacific switchman who had received fatal injuries at the depot, Thursday night, and had expired on Friday afternoon, were holding wake over his corpse in the office of the Omaha House, lower Fifth street, Friday night. About 11 o'clock, a young fellow who gave his name as Frank Smith, entered the house, and—in a noisy manner as some witnesses assert—asked for a night's lodging, which was refused him, upon which there seems to have ensued some sort of a quarrel, as the friends of the deceased insisted on having the quiet decorum due to a dead man preserved, while the late-comer petulantly pushed his demand for the bed. It is said one of the watchers slapped Smith on the head. Rash words were bandied about and at last Smith was crowded out of the front door, we understand by Patsy Jones. As soon as Smith reached the door, on the outside, he pulled, what from subsequent evidence, appears to have been a 35-calibre pistol, and fired the shot taking effect in the right lung of Patsy Jones, a brakeman on the Union Pacific Railroad, about twenty-six years of age, and according to general report, a man of good behavior and steady conduct. Jones fell at once to the ground, and while the first thought of those present was to rush to the assistance of the wounded man and send for a surgeon, the arrant coward who sent the fatal missile into the body of a defenseless fellow-being, made his escape.

In the fright of his murderous action he wandered around until about 10 o'clock in the morning, when he came to the Keeney House, at the U. C. depot, obtained a room and went to bed. About 7 o'clock he was arrested and taken to the bed-side of his victim who was then, apparently, in the last supreme moments of his earthly existence. And then there Patsy Jones solemnly and repeatedly declared that he positively recognized Frank Smith as the man who had fired the ball which had prostrated him on his low couch of imminent death. The accused man is a young fellow, short-set, but rather stout. His face is round and ruddy, boyish-looking, but a sinister expression in his eyes betrays a villain, if not a naturally vicious character. He was here, about three weeks ago, trying to start a fare game, but subsequently went to Salt Lake, whence he returned Friday morning.—Ogden Herald.
